U.K. Aide Calls Ban 'Mistake'

Galvin Incident A 'Setback' for Policy in Ulster

By Jo Thomas

BELFAST - Britain's Northern Ireland secretary, James Prior, said Tuesday that the decision to ban Martio Galvin, publicity director of the Irisb Northern Aid Committee, an American fund-raising organization that supports the out-lawed Irish Republican Army, looks like a bad mistake."

Mr. Prior, the senior government minister in charge of the province, said he took "full responsibility" for the decision. Police efforts to arrest Mr. Galvin at a rally on Sunday resulted in one death and at least 20 injuries.

"If things had worked out differ-ently," said Mr. Prior, "we might have been under just as much criti-cism if we had not banned him from coming here. Here was a man that openly supported murder, violence, collected money, arms to kill soldiers, to kill policemen. Now when you know all that, would you just sit idly by and say: 'Let this man come. Let him do what be "The Philippioes is beading wants.' Would you?"

A statement attributed th Mr. Galvin said he regarded Mr. Prior's Other ties that bind are the more comments as a removal of the ban, reported. The statement, issued in Dublin by Sinn Fein, the political arm of the IRA, said: "Since Jim Prior himself has now admitted that the ban against me was an error, may I now consider the ban to be withdrawn or must I take further action to use their ban to further expose the indefensible realities of British rule in [reland?"]

It was 15 years ago Tuesday that the British troops were deployed to relieve the exhausted police and keep peace on the streets of Northern Ireland. Since then, 377 soldiers, 200 regular and reserve po-liee officers, and nearly 2,500 civilians have died.

Reagan Rebuffed On Taxes

Republicans Use Comma to Kill A Compromise

Compiled by Our Staff From Dispatches DALLAS - Republican platform writers used a single comma Tuesday to toughen an anti-tax plank that had been endorsed by the White House as a way of keep-ing President Ronald Reagan's options open on a 1985 tax increase.

The move came as the Republicans began putting the finishing touches on the platform that will be submitted for ratification Tuesday at the party's convention here. It prolonged a potentially em-barrassing public dispute over what position the party should take on tax increases. Reagan administra-tion officials have insisted that the platform language allow the presi-dent the option of raising taxes as a "last resort," while party conservatives have demanded language ruling out a tax increase uoder any circumstances.

On Sunday, Drew Lewis, the president's chief representative to presideot's chief representative to the platform meeting, said that Mr. Reagan was prepared to "repudiate the Republican platform" if it flat-ly rules out a tax increase. The language approved by the subcommittee dealing with eco-nomic policy said: "We therefore oppose any attempts to increase taxes, which would harm the recovery and reverse the trend to restoring control of the economy to indi-vidual Americans."

The only change from what the White House had endorsed as a compromise was the insertioo of a comma after the word "taxes" -

but the result was elimination of an escape hatch under which taxes could be raised if they did oot harm the recovery.

There was oo immediate reaction from the White House or Mr. Lewis. Senator Robert J. Dole of Kansas, an advocate of giving the presi-dent flexibility to raise taxes if necessary, did not indicate whether the change would be challenged in the full platform committee. "I think we'll take a look at it a get an English major in to take a look at it. "be said. "We'll just call in a typo."

Representative Trent Lott of

Mississippi, chairman of the party's Platform Committee, said he thought the White House could live with the comma. He noted that another amendment adopted Tuesday, stating that party members, "forsee no economic circumstances which would call for increased taxmembers of the seminary whose ation," gave the president even more flexibility. testimony, the attorney general said, contradicted the seller's elaim

With less than a minute's discussion, the subcommittee also ap-proved a plank that said. "We will eliminate taxation of interest income on savings accounts." Such a move would cost the Treasury billions of dollars in lost revenue since interest from savings is taxed now as regular income.
Mr. Lewis and Senator Robert

W. Kasten Jr. of Wisconsin had worked out the compromise on Monday that would pledge the party to "categorically reject proposals to increase taxes in a misguided effort to balance the budget. Tax and spending iocreases would reduce incentives for economic activity and abort the recovery."

That proposal also retained language from an earlier platform draft that did not expressly rule out a tax increase. The insertion of the comma on Tuesday seemed to undo this language.
Conservatives in the party, who dominate the platform drafting committee, have insisted that there be no "loopholes" to blur the difference between Mr. Reagan and Walter F. Mondale. Mr. Mondale, the Democratic nominee, has said he would raise taxes to cut the deficit and has accused Mr. Reagan of having a "secret plan" to do the same. The draft platform language rejects any such plan and says that deficits should be curbed "by first continuing strong economic recovery and second, eliminating wasteful goverment spending

During the day Monday, the Republicans appeared embarrassed in their conflict over the tax issue, which Mr. Mondale made the center of debate in his acceptance

At a morning news conference, Mr. Kasten said that most Republicans "do not want to leave a window open" for a 1985 tax increase and complained that Mr. Reagan's "last-resort" qualification "has made it more difficult" for the platform committee to do its work. "We are not anxious to leave a lot of wiggle room," he said.

Mr. Kasten said he remained unconvinced that the president was looking for a loophole, because "he is opposed to taxes in general."

New Polish 'Who's Who' Shows Who's Not and What's What

By Michael T. Kaufman

New York Times Service WARSAW - A recently issued modern biographical directory in Polish, Poland's first, reveals ant anty who's who, but also who is not and what is what, at least in the view of the censors.

Among those missing from the volume's 1,171 pages are some of Poland's best-known personalities, people whose curricula vitae were ordered excised by government censors as being politically unacceptable.

Such censorship is a fact of life here. But in this case, the determination of exactly who is no longer who, or who is who but with epaulets stripped, is made possi-ble by the existence of another book, "Who's Who in Poland." It was printed in English two years ago by Who's Who Co. of Zurich in collaboration with interpress, a Polish government information agency.

That book, printed in Italy and not subject to Polish censorship, formed the basis for the expurgated Polish edition that Interpress has just issued. It invites comparisons that reveal, often by nuance, what kind of subjects and what kind of people are now ant acceptable, at least not in Polish.

There is, for example, Lech Walesa, leader of the

By the same token, government critics see the new edition as a retreat from 1982, when the Interpress publishers lent their imprimatur to a book that listed Mr. Kuron, Mr. Michnik and others among Poland's most prominent figures.

The small type of both volumes also contains much human drama.

For instance, there is the sense of betrayal and strain in the separate entries of Dariusz Fikus and Jerzy Urban, once co-authors, Mr. Fikus was a member of the editorial board of the liberal weekly journal Polityka until he left the paper, turned in his Communist Party card and became the second in command of the journalists' union associated with Solidarity.

Mr. Urban, as his citation makes clear, was never a party member. He left his association with Polityka to become the chief spokesman for the government of

As for cultural figures, perhaps the most notable gap concerns Tadeusz Konwicki, one of Poland's bestnown writers, who is not mentioned in either directory. According to sources at Interpress, Mr. Konwicki, who was recently denied a Polish passport and thus kept from visiting his daughter in the United States, simply did not bother to fill out a questionnaire in time to be included in the 1982 book.

For the Polish volume, he submitted a sketch with a full list of his works, including "The Polish Complex" and "A Minor Apocalypse," both translated and pub-lished abroad but banned in Poland.

The sources said the entry, along with all the others, was sent to the censors, who struck out the references to the banned books. Mr. Konwicki was asked to approve the remaining section but refused, saying a life's work cannot be trimmed to conform to the requirements of political censors. The entire item was ordered dropped.

Mr. Walesa made the comments as he marked the fourth anniversary of the strikes at the Lenin ship-yard in Gdansk that spawned Solidarity, the first independent trade union in the Soviet bloc. Mr. Walesa's remarks on the fu-ture role of Solidarity were his most definitive since parliament ap-proved the amnesty on July 21. They coincide with comments made by three Solidarity advisers, leaders of a workers' rights group, following their release from prison.

Mr. Walesa was surrounded hy about 200 supporters as he made his way to a monument at the ship-yard gate. The monument was built in 1980 because of pressure from Solidarity to commemorate scores of workers who died nearby a de-cade earlier in a clash with security

Mr. Walesa said he decided to mark the anniversary quietly be-cause the government amnesty for political prisoners had created a new situation in Poland. He said They also said that even if the multinational minesweeping effort is successful, it will be difficult to prove who was responsible for the mining because simply determining the place of manufacture of the explosives will not establish blame. Republican Leaders And Att Republican Concerted Attack On Ferraro Finances

By Howell Raines. en York Times Service

WASHINGTON - Republican leaders have opened a concerted attack on Representative Geraldine A. Ferraro after the announcement by the Democratic vice preside tial candidate that her husband returns.

The attacks, led on Monnay of Senator Robert J. Dole of Kansas snokesman for Vice President George Bush, reflected the private judgment of President Ron-ald Reagan's re-election strategists that Ms. Ferraro's announcement offered a chance to dim her luster as the new star of the campaign year. The announcement ran counter to her earlier promise of full financial disclosure by her and her husband, John A. Zaccaro.

Republican strategists said that for the first time the Republicans had a "genderless issue" that they without risking a background of the pathy for her.

The public interest and the public's right to know have not changed." Mr. Dole said at a news conference in Dallas. Have Ms. Ferraro's views on disclosure changed?"

Mr. Dole and many other Republican leaders were in Dallas for hearings on the Republican plat-form, and his news conference was held with the approval of the Reagan re-election committee and the Republican National Committee. Peter Teeley, Mr. Bush's press secretary, also criticized Mr. Zao-11:11 (nil Wit caro as "a very selfish man."

"He must have something to hide," said Mr. Teeley. "When you've got the first woman on a national ticket who's got an oppornunity to be the first female vice president of the United States, if you're a millionaire and you're in business, that becomes so much less important than doing everything you can to help elect your wife to the vice president's office, and that would include releasing worr income tax."

Mr. Teeley said that Mr. Bush eleased his income tax forms for 1977 through 1980, and that in 1981 Mr. and Mrs. Bush's holdings went into the "most stringent" blind trust that could be arranged

Under that trust they do not see the income tax returns, he said, because for them to do so would "defeat the purpose of a blind trust," which is to prevent conflict of interest by prohibiting the officeholder from knowing where his money is invested.

Walter F. Mondale, the Democratic presidential nominee, said at a news conference in North Oaks, Minnesota, said of Mr. Zaccaro, "That's his decision and he's made that decision. As the presidential nonince, I will take the responsibility for my running mate. She is fully complying with the law." On July 24, Ms. Ferraro had said that she would "disclose my tax returns and my husband's tax returns for the past several years," even though that disclosure is not required under U.S. election laws. On Sunday, Ms. Ferraro said that her husband had refused to release his tax returns on the ground that it would create a disadvantage for his real estate company in New York City.

The Ethics in Government Act of 1978 requires presidential and ice-presidential candidates and their spouses to disclose their sources of income and their finan-cial liabilities. Only under a narrow set of circumstances can the spouse of a candidate be exempted. The law does not require that income tax forms be released.

However, since 1976 the candidates on both the Republican and Democratic tickets have voluntarily released their income tax returns. On Sunday there were demands from Republicans, some Democrats, and the citizens' organization Common Cause that Ms. Ferraro and her husband continue this tra-

Ms. Ferraro's statement was a dominant concern among Republican officeholders and strategists in Dallas oo Monday. The consensus was that the tax-return issue and the broader question of Mr. Zaccaro's business dealings might set-tle the Republicans' problem of finding a way to run against the

■ Reagan Holds Firm in Poll Hedrick Smith of The New York Times reported from New York:

The political lift that Mr. Mondale hoped to gain from the Demo-cratic National Convention and the nomination of Ms. Ferraro has not materialized, according to the latest New York Times-CBS News

The survey found that (2 percent of the nation's registered voters approved of having a woman as a vice-presidential nominee, but that the American electorate had a less favorable opinion of Mr. Mondale now than it did before the Democratic convention.

While Ms. Ferraro remains less well known than Mr. Mondale, the survey found one-fourth of those who oow back the Democratic ticket like her better than he. By comparison, only one-tenth of those who back the Republican ticket like Vice President Bush better than President, Reagan.

Growth by Shrinkage?

Unemployment affects 11 percent of Europe's workers and is still rising. Many of the young and the disadvantaged risk never getting a job because the longer you are without one, the less your chances. In so grim a situation, the reflex of governments a decade ago would have been to reflate demand. This reflex is muted in Europe today because during the past 10 years reflation has often simply pushed up prices, not output and inbs.

It may be exaggerated to assume that governments today are totally unable to reduce memployment by increasing real expenditure. America has done just this. But with inflation just beneath the surface in some of Europe and well above it in the rest, most governments will remain prudent. In any case, many believe that unemployment reflects long-term structural problems that cannot be solved quickly.

If old-fashioned stabilization policy cannot be used, it is natural to look for other ways to reduce joblessness. The idea of work-sharing has become widely popular in Europe: reduce the length of the workweek for all employed, or increase the length of holidays, nr retire people early—so as in provide jobs for others. A degree of interest is also being expressed in the United States, along lines argued ou this page today by Barbara R. Bergmann.

The concept has its attractions. Maybe the house is the labor forms are becoming less.

haves in the labor force are becoming less reluctant to help the have-nots. At least ostensibly, it is about unemployment, not wages, that Britain's coal miners and West Germany's metalworkers have struck this year. But there are fundamental difficulties in the concept.

Europe's current problems are, importantly, the result of 15 years of inflation and the ensuing shyness of industry to invest. The worst thing that could happen would be a sudden new impulse toward higher labor costs, and that is what work-sharing risks.

If, one way or another, those with jobs suddenly work appreciably less, will they accept lower earnings, exchanging income for unpaid leisure? There are a few examples where they have professed their readiness, but many where they haven't. In a crunch, are individuals going to look after the general interest rather than their own? The danger is that, as France found when it tried to move swiftly from 40 to 35 hours a week, labor will want shorter hours but the same weekly pay. Perhaps labor costs - vital in any decisi by business to hire more labor rather than economize on it - could be contained in a shorter-week exercise because output per hour would rise. It often does when work time is reduced. But this may simply reduce the extent to which shorter hours create more jobs.

Another effect of work-sharing might be to attract to the labor market people who are not currently seeking jobs — pushing up the applicants as fast as it creates jnb nffers.

More fundamentally, is work-sharing the road down which Europe should now start to tread? It could mean the end of an ambition --which ought to continue—to restore anything like the growth process that Europe achieved in the 25 years or so after the war. It is surely premature to assume that, even if inflation is mastered, Europe will be unable to provide jobs for its population unless it provokes a brutal acceleration of the normal historic trend toward shorter hours. Significantly, Sweden, never adverse to solutions that shock the conservatives, professes little interest in the idea. INTERNATIONAL HERALD TRIBUNE.

'The Bear Is Gnawing on His Own Paws'

LOS ANGELES — Why is the Soviet Union being so beastly? There was the beating of the U.S. Marine guard in Leningrad by KGB thugs. The harassment of American tourists. The arrest in Moscow of 50 members of an unauthorized Soviet peace group that had the audacity to call for a U.S.-Soviet summit meeting. The ugly campaign of vilification against America. The accusations of West German "revanchism." The Reagan administration says the Kremlin's policy of calculated nastiness is part of an attempt to bring about President Reagan's defeat in November. There is probably a strong element of truth in that. Unfortunately, however, it does not follow that things will fundamentally improve after the election, whoever wins.

The reality seems to be that the Soviet system is in trouble and that its leaders, fearful of what genuine reforms would do to their power, are retreating into an ugly combination of stepped-up repression and of xenophobic hostility and picion toward the West,

In the words of Senator Charles Percy, the In the words of senator chartes rercy, the Illinois Republican who chains the Senate Foreign Relations Committee, "the Soviets now believe that what they call the 'correlation of forces' in the world [is] beginning to turn against them, and they are reacting by circling the wagons." In the Soviet lexicon, the correlation of forces in the soviet lexicon, the correlation of forces in the soviet lexicon, the correlation military.

is measured out only by the respective military power of the Soviet camp and the West; it also reckons economic strength, political unity and global perceptions of which side is winning. According to Marxist-Lenimist theory, the correla-tion of forces is destined by history to move inexorably in favor of communism.

A Canadian diplomat, Robert A.D. Ford, writes in Foreign Affairs that "the idea of status quo, while acceptable as a temporary tactic, is rejected as a goal of Soviet policy." Mr. Ford, who spent 16 years in Moscow, points out that the Soviet concept of détente, or peaceful coexistence, fits comfortably in this framework.

In 1972, even as Leonid Brezhnev was busy signing agreements with Washington and ex-changing toasts with Richard Nixon and Henry By Ernest Conine

Kissinger, be was also saying that peaceful co-existence "in no way implies the possibility of relaxing the ideological struggle. On the con-trary, we must be prepared for this struggle to be sified and become an even sharper form of confrontation between the two systems."

Those were the salad days, when it was possie to call communism the wave of the future without snickering. Things were going wrong when Brezhnev died, and they have grown worse. Sure, the Soviet Union can take some comfort from its growing military strength, the emergence of neutralist longings among large numbers of West Germans and Scandinavians, the erosion of American prestige in the Middle East and the divisive effect of Marxist-led insurrections in Central America on American politics. The fact remains that the overall outlook is grim.

The Soviet leaders plainly hoped that their campaign of intimidation against the deployment of U.S.-made missiles in Europe would uail down their domination of the European land mass. So far it hasn't. The United States is refusing to accept a position of military inferiority, and if you read the Democratic Party's platform carefully it appears that Walter Mondale is not prepared to preside over a pro-Soviet shift in the correlation of forces.

The economy, burdened by a rigid system of centralized control, is finding it difficult to cope in the new age of explosively changing technology and industrial-management techniques. Soviet society shows signs of a deep malaise Corruption is rife, the work ethic is seriously frayed and younger Soviet citizens display pre-cions little attachment to Communist ideology. After almost 40 years, the people of Eastern Europe still despise the Soviet Union and resent its domination over their lives. The Communist parties of Western Europe, once the obedient servants of Soviet purposes, are nowadays ashamed of their Russian connections.

The Soviet system has lost whatever attraction it once had in the Third World, Anti-Western revolutionaries welcome Soviet arms, but, as events in Africa demonstrate, in the long run such countries gravitate toward the West and its superior reservoirs of capital and know-how.

Yuri Andropov showed signs of recognizing that business-as-usual, with regard either to the West or to the Soviet Union's internal problems. would not do. But he is dead. His successor, Konstantin Chernenko, is the archetypal represcotative of the old-line bureaucracy that is part of the problem rather than the solution. An American scholar tells of his conversation with a longtime Soviet acquaintance in a Mos-cow think tank that deals with East-West problems. According to his account of the conversation, his Soviet contact told him that there is nothing that the United States can do to put U.S. Soviet relations back on the track.

"Our Stalinists are back in power," the Soviet academician told him, "and nothing can be done until these old men are gone."

If that is true, the severe case of Soviet grumpiness will not go away just because one man or the other is elected president of the United States, other is elected president of the United States.
The Soviets assuredly would explore what free concessions might be forthcoming from a new president, but, unless you assume that Mr. Mondale is an idiot, you have to conclude that he would not be willing to concede a tilt of the correlation of forces in Moscow's favor.

The Soviets exercise to seem this reality but

The Soviets seem to sense this reality but cannot act accordingly. As a longtime Western observer of things Russian puts it, "The Russian bear has not only retreated into his cage, he is sitting there gnawing on his own paws.

Reagan Drops a Bomb

Other Opinion

The problem is not that President Reagan should never say never, but a tax increase has likes to kid around, which is usually an appealing trait. It's his choice of subjects.

When be gave the usual voice check before his radio broadcast last weekend, he said: "My fellow Americans, I am pleased to tell you I just signed legislation which outlaws Russia forever. We begin bombing in five minutes." Nuclear destruction is not something most people think of as a fit subject for summer sport. There is nn danger that anyone will take a remark like that seriously - yet plenty of danger that it will be misunderstood.

Meanwhile, although the president evidently wants to be taken seriously on the subject of a 1985 tax increase, he has been making it hard to do so. A week ago he said: "We have no plans for, nor will I allow any plans for, a tax increase. Period." Then Vice President Bush said the president would keep his tax options open. Then on Sunday Mr. Reagan acknowledged that tax increases oext year were indeed possible: "A president of the United States

A Case for Shortening the Workweek in America

OS ANGELES — The recent seven-week strike by West German metalworkers for a shorter workweek signals the start of a movement that may soon pick up steam and spread to the rest of Europe and America. There are two reasons why a shorter workweek would make sense in the United States. One is the fact that, despite a vigorous recovery, the unemployment rate is expected to remain high by historical standards; a shorter workweek would "spread the work" and allow more people to have jobs. Second, many workers would like to have more time to devote to their families or to leisure activides, and would be willing to trade pay increases for fewer bours.

By Barbara R. Bergmann

in America has receded and can be expected to drop a bit more, optimism about the longer-term outlook appears to be unwarranted. There is virtually nn chance that the present recovery can continue long enough to bring unemployment down to anywhere near the 4-percent level once considered a reasonable approximation of "full employment."

Since 1970 there have been three recessions, each of which has carried the unemployment rate to a higher peak: 6.1 percent in 1971, 9 percent m 1975 and 10.7 percent in 1982. As the recessions have grown increasing-

Although the unemployment rate ly painful, the subsequent recoveries have sopped up a lower proportion of the unemployment.

The present U.S. unemployment rate of 7.5 percent looks good when compared to the situation of two years ago, but it looks terrible when compared to any reasonable standard of economic health. Moreover, much of the recovery in employment may be past. Already interest rates are rising, and this is bound to restrict further growth in employment. Reaganomics has not succeeded in breaking the dismal long-term trend of poorer recoveries The proposal for a shorter workweek would attack unemployment by increasing the number of people it takes to maintain a given level of production. Such schemes can be la-beled "defeatist" because they do not attempt to increase the demand for labor by stimulating production. Yet perhaps the time has come to ac-knowledge that policies attacking in-employment through demand-side or supply-side stimulation have in truth not worked well enough.

Among academic economists, Nobel Prize winner Wassily Leontief of New York University advocates a shorter workweek to meet the insuffi-cient demand for workers. He sees the problem of unemployment growing even more acute as computerization of the economy increases. American labor unions would have to be in the forefront of the campaign for fewer hours if the idea were to make headway. Unions are showing some interest in the concept; an arti-cle in a recent issue of the AFL-CIO's magazine was supportive of the idea...

Business, understandably, has been hostile to demands for a reduced workweek. Management fears that the result would be increased labor and capital costs and disruption of work schedules. Yet there is a way to move to a shorter workweek group — whose chairman reportedly without a big increase in costs. is President Li Xiannian — actually The current rise in productivity increase in real hourly pay and a simultaneous and offsetting decrease in hours. This would avoid a painful drop in the real purchasing power of weekly pay for the workers, but would keep costs within bounds.

Scheduling problems would have to be worked out. A half-hour off each work day would probably induce little increase in employment. But a 41/2-day week alternating with a 5-day week would average out to a 5percent reduction in the workweek, which might have a significant effect.

A move to a 4½-day week might start a trend toward fundamental changes. Warkers and employers might become more flexible to allow for more individual scheduling of work time. People might come to think of a workweek as consisting of as many half-day units as necessary for them to satisfy their demand for income and free time.

The current hard-and-fast distinc-tion between full- and part-time em-ployees might be lessened, along with the severe discrimination that parttime employees currently suffer in pay and fringe benefits.

With improved opportunities for part-time work at decent hourly pay with proportionate fringe benefits. more employees would switch to a part-time schedule. Thus work and the income that it generates could be shared more widely.

How China Formulates Its Policy By A. Doak Barnett

McLEAN, Virginia — In a re-markable statement during a personal interview granted to me in Beijing. Prime Minister Zhao Ziyang described with unprecedented detail the foreign-policy-making roles and relationships. of China's top party and government leaders. His statements indicate that much of the conments incurate that much of the con-ventional wisdom in the West about how Chinese policy-making takes piace is out of date.

It is essential that leaders in Washington and elsewhere in the West recognize that under Deng Xiaoping's aegis a new generation of leaders now manages policy-making in both domestic and foreign affairs. These are the men the West must deal with in the years ahead.

As the Chinese put it, these leaders are now the "first line" in policy-making. Most older leaders have been eased into the background, into the so-called second line.

Western analysts generally have believed that most key policy deci-sions are made in meetings of the 27-member Politburo and its six-membes standing committee. Mr. Zhao states that the standing committee no longer meets as a body and that the full Politburo now meets only irregufull Politouro now meets only irregu-larly and infrequency.

Clearly, the day-to-day process of major policy decision takes place mainly in the party Central Commi-tee's secretariat, which consists of General Secretary Hu Yaobang and 11 regular and alternate members, and in the State Council's "inner cab-inet" consisting of Mr. Zhao, four deputy prime ministers and 10 state councillors, each supervising a broad area of government work:
Mr. Zhao says that the State Coun-

week, which is far more frequently than outside observers have assumed. He says that even though be is not formally a member of the secretariat, he sits in on its meetings — which suggests close collaboration and coordination. Other official Chinese sources state that the secretariat also meets twice a week. Mr. Zhao stresses that Deng Xiao ping personally remains the ultimate source of decision-making authority, involved in all really major decisions, and that the secretariat and the State Council still consult party elders in the Politburo and the standing committee. But Mr. Hu's secretariat and Mr. Zhao's State Council run the party and government on a day-to-day basis, in close consultation with each other and with Mr. Deng. Mr. Zhao, describing the decision-making process for foreign policy, discussed two important groups never before publicly mentioned by top leaders. One is a special foreign af-fairs group under the secretariat, the other coordinating group for for eign policy under the State Council. The party's foreign affairs group is described by Mr. Zhao as primarily a consultative body. However, this brings most of China's best foreign could allow for a oon-inflationary affairs specialists, including academ ics, together to discuss key policy H.T. GUIDE sions and certainly is a major adviser to the secretariat. The coordinating group under the State Council, as described by Mr. VEL & ENTERTA Ji Pengfei, a former foreign minister.

He meets frequently to coordinate the foreign policy activities of government ministries with Foreign Minister Wu Xueqian and the minister for foreign economic relations and trade, Chen Muhna. The most important conclusion emerging from the interview is that the main locus of day-to-day policymaking has shifted from the Politburo, where party elders still predominate, to the party secretariat and the State Council, where Hu Yaobang and Zhao Ziyang represent the new generation of Chinese leaders. That Mr. Hu and Mr. Zhao play such key policy-making roles has im-portant implications for China's broad foreign policy and for U.S.-Chinese relations. Both men are strong promoters of Beijing's new "open door" policy of steady expansion of foreign economic relations to support China's economic modernization. Both are committed to China's new "independent" foreign policy, which calls for close cooperation with America and cantious normalization of relations with the Soviet Union, but no close military-strategic alignment with either superpower. Both, in short, symbolize China's present determination to become a more active participant in the international community while pursuing its own national interests and developmental objectives.

Taiwan and Hong Kong

The media are kidding themselves if they really think the Chinese on Taiwan are going to take Hong Kong as some sort of example for Taiwan's unification with mainland China.

Few people in Taiwan compare Taiwan with Hong Kong. Historically, Hong Kong has never had a role in the Nationalist-Communist rivalry. It has never been set in fierce opposi-tion to the Chinese Communist regime. Hong Kong is not an enemy of the Beijing regime, whereas National-ONDON — The massive tele vision confidence trick called the Olympic Games has mercifully petered out, and with any luck will never reappear. Anything can happen in four years.

My implacable detestation of the Olympics wins me no friends. But, like Los Angeles itself, it is built on straightforward mercenary logic. In Britain we all pay a not inconsiderable license fee to keep the BBC going, and for most of the year I reckon we get very good value. Except for this mercifully brief summer period when we are taken over by this scourge of Olympiasis. One must assume that the top brass of programming is of the man-types who get pleasure from watching nther man-types (of either sex) running round grass tracks or jumping over high things or throw-ing very heavy lumps of something -activities which to most of us are by now so excruciatingly familiar as to be boring beyond belief.

It will be evident that I am not adequate competitive swimmer. I played fair golf. And until recently I could reckon to run 100 yards in about 21 seconds, given a minute's rest halfway through. Today I do nothing at all, and gravely resent the television assuming that the prospect of faraway strangers running and jumping about is worth a pound-a-week license fee The trouble is, the thing has become self-generative. Everybody now knows and debates the name of Zola Budd. Whn is Zola Budd? I am sure she is nice. She is apparently a tongue-tied South African adolescent who wangled a British passport so that she could become the total example of how a non-person can make it into internacional celebrity by running around barefoot.

fans who were lucky enough to be there turn to 1988. Once again, politi-cians are ahead of the pack. The first two worthies I encountered here were Representative Jack Kemp and Senator Bob Dole, nominally working an the 1984 Republican platform but actually gearing up their 1988 presidential campa They are only two of a large field, for the overriding fact of this Republican convention is that it is Ronald Reagan's last as a cootender.

A generation of Republican politicians has come of age since Mr. Reagan first sought the nomination. That was back in 1968 when the newly elected California governor launched a last-minute bid to derail Richard Nixon. When you remember how long he has dominated the Republican national scene, you understand the eagerness of so many younger Republicans to get started on 1988.

Consider one of the darker horses in the 1988 parade, Delaware's Governor Pierre S. du Pont 4th. He was only 33 when Mr. Reagan first sought the nomination. He will be 53 in 1988. But ambition deferred is often ambition strengthened. The 1988 presidential campaigns expected of Vice President George Bush and Sen-ate Majority Leader Howard Baker were nurtured in the 1970s, and Mr. du Pont, some say, had that goal in mind at least that far back Carlos Lopes of Portugal an Olympic Punt's years as governmr, says, marathon champion at 37. marathon champion at 37.

Without that drive and ambition, politics and sports would both lack the competitive challenge that make them distinctive. So I was amused, not offended, when I found on a recent visit to Wilmington that the book on display in the office of the retiring governor of Delaware was an album of New Hampshire scenes. He received it in thanks for one of the dozens of speeches he has made already in the state that traditionally holds the first presidential primary. No one named du Pont is ever going to be considered a complete underdog in anything, but Nelson Rockefeller's example offers telling evidence that wealth by itself will not unlock the door to the presidency.

It takes dogged determination and ambition even to be in a position to compete for the job; in Mr. du Pont's case, two years in the Delaware Leg-islature, then six years in the U.S. House of Representatives, then eight years in the governorship. When he talks of his record as governor, one hears echoes of Ronald Reagan talking about his California vears. There have been two acrossthe-board tax cuts, a deficit erased, a spurt of economic growth, a boost in education funding and an innovative program for job training and placement of high school students.

Many find this persistent ambition offensive, but it is, in truth, the same admirable buman trait that has made Like Mr. Reagan, Mr. du Pont has earned the grudging admiration of Democrats who first scorned him as a

U.S. Businessmen Abroad Finally Decide the Price of Culture Shock Is Too High

By Don Oldenburg
Washington Part Service

T ASHINGTON — Most people who ASHINGTON — Most people who beard the rumor that Nancy Reagan wanted to take her china along on the state visit in late April and early May to the People's Republic of China, probably shrugged it off as a bit like taking coal to Newcastle. But for the Chinese, a people proud of their delicate ceramics and immaculate table settings, it would have been a slap in the face.

The first lady did not take her china. But, despite the best of briefings and intentions. American presidents and envoys have a long history of stepping on foreign toes. During the China trip, President Ronald Reagan good-naturedly handed a shopkeeper the equivalent of $5 for an item priced about half as much and told him to keep the change. Not only did Mr. Reagan insult the merchant, who had to scurry after the entourage to return the change, but he also broke official Chinese rules.

And Thais still talk about Lyndon B. Johnson's visit in the mid-1960s when, seated next to King Bhumibol Adulyadej in a program shown on national television, the lanky Texan hitched his foot up over his thigh and pointed his shoe directly at the king — a common, obscene gesture in that country. It did oot relieve tensions when, on the same telecast, the American president gave the Thai queen a big hug. Solemn tradition in Thailand demands that nobody touch the queen.

Boorish conduct is not the uncontested private preserve of government officials. Outside U.S. borders, American tourists, businessmen, even diplomats whose language skills and understanding of foreign etiquette is better suited to a burlesque stage than the international are- col bewildering.

na, are often involved in antics that annoy other

But Americans are gradually getting sensitive about being insensitive. For almost 20 years, experts in cross-cultural training have called it "a national problem of great dimension." But few have listened. Uotil oow.

Why? For the first time, the problem is expressing itself in a universal language - money. The same bull-in-a-china-shop attitude toward foreign cultures and languages that has always cost American travelers respect overseas is now costing American business billions of dollars a year, according to experts.

The idea that we have to adjust to the culture and language of other countries really hasn't been exercised in this country at all," said Representative Leon E. Panetta, a California Democrat who is co-chairman of the House-Senate International Education Study Group and cosponsor of a bipartisan bill that would beef up foreign language and international studies in America's high schools.

"We're lazy when it comes to understanding other cultures," Mr. Panetta adds. "It's oot stressed in our educational system. It's not stressed when we gn abroad because we figure there's always somebody there who can speak English. But from a security point of view, from a business point of view, Americans must learn to relate to other people on the same basis that we relate to each other."

That is easier said than done for many of the 4.3 million Americans who will take business trips abroad this year or for almost the same number who, because of the strong U.S. dollar, will travel to foreign countries as tourists.

Speaking other languages presents enough of a problem. But subtle customs that change from one country to the next make attention to proto-

In Sweden, peo-terized by high expectations, the newness of ple are prompt to the second.

Important items on the agenda receive attention first in the United States but in Ethiopia the - paranoia, fear, even the smell and taste of reverse is true. Many foreign businessmen re- things get to you. To survive, you develop a quire that a personal rapport develop before a coping strategy which, if you succeed, leads to peso, yen or rival changes hands. Americans adapting." usually have little patience for this courtship

HE resulting confusion is sometimes called "culture shock." According to intercultural experts, more than one-third of all Americans who take up residence in foreign countries return prematurely because they are unable to adapt to day-to-day life.

"They grow up like the rest of us, knowing their own culture intuitively," said Fanchon Silberstein, coordinator of the State Department's Overseas Briefing Center. Mr. Silber-stein, who has lived abroad off and on for 21 years, specializes in cultural uprooting and in preparing Foreign Service officers and their families for ocw posts.

The essence of so-called culture shock is not in the big things, like differences in religion, in varying holiday practices or even speaking the language grammatically," said Mr. Silberstein. "What's shocking is what you honestly can't do in the everyday world — things like buying food, making people laugh at our jokes, finishing our work on time."

"First, there's the honeymoon period, characeverything, an exciting feeling," Mr. Lloyd said.
"That's followed by the disenchantment phase

The normal failure rate in a country such as Saudi Arabia, according to Mr. Lloyd, is 68 percent of those with no training in cross-cultural living. They either give up and go home or, in unusual circumstances, stick it out and continue to suffer serious problems. Even a country as similar to the United States as England, where language differences are minimal but cultural values differ, has a failure rate among untrained Americans of 18 percent.

"Cross-cultural mistakes can result in ruined careers, lost contracts and unprofitable overseas operations," said Lewis Griggs of Copeland-Griggs Productions in San Francisco, a company he and his wife, Lennie Copeland, founded a year ago. They invested about a half a million dollars in making a series of four slickly produced training films that alert executives to the pitfalls of life abroad

Mr. Griggs says about 140 customers — companies such as Amoco, Bechtel, Hewlett-Packard and Federal Express, and government agencies such as the Central Intelligence Agency and the Peace Corps — bought 600 copies of the four-part series in the first six months.

But does cross-cultural training really make a difference? According to Mr. Lloyd, the success mant." rate from proper training can be phenomenal. He cites a current training project of the Business Council for International Understanding with the Sandi Petrochemical Co. in which 600 Americans suffered no failures. He points to an F-16 manufacturing project in Western Europe, where Pratt & Whitney trained 47 families it sent and had no failures. But General Dynamics, at the same project, did oot train its employces and had a 37-percent failure rate.

NTERCULTURAL training experts such Mr. Lloyd also emphasize that the individual, foreign-based employee and project are not the only beneficiaries of cultural awareness. They like to mention examples of corporate fiascos abroad that a little knowledge could have prevented.

For instance, the company that advertises it wants to "teach the world to sing in perfect harmony" has had its problems harmonizing overseas. When the Coca-Cola Co. took its soft drink to China, it provided local shopkeepers signs printed in English. The Chinese merchants translated the signs in their own writing with the result that the name was read as "ke kou ke la," which translates as "bite the wax tadpole." Coca-Cola researched 40,000 characters and found a close calligraphic equivalent, "ko kou ko le," which roughly translates as "may the mouth rejoice."

Culture shock typically sets in within three to six months after relocating, according to Gary

"The premature return of an overseas employee, a spouse and two kids; can cost a compasix months after relocating, according to Gary

A more daring opposition press highlights charges of massive waste and corruption in the government as well as military abuses, particularly increased summary executions.

One basic conclusion that emerges from a two-mooth visit to the Philippines and interviews with a wide variety of government, oppo-sition, military, church, academic and business sources is that government credibility is oear rock bottom. Its credibility has deteriorated in part because of an inconsistent pattern of expla- left his authoritarian powers intact after he of the country's 73 provinces, compared with 43 nations about the ecocomy, the insurgency and the assassination on Aug. 21, 1983, of Mr. Mar-Under martial law — in the oame cos's political archrival, Benigno S. Another is that the origins of the current political and economie crisis long predate Mr. Aquino's assassination and stem essentially from Mr. Marcos's systematic dismantling under martial law of the system of checks and balances that the country inherited from its U.S.

"The Acuino assassination merely exploded earlier what would have happened later," said Luis Villafuerte, a former trade minister under Mr. Marcos, who joiced the opposition and won a parliamentary seat in the May election. "The fundamental causes of the crisis were already in RUSTRATION is high among American diolomats because the United States seems poorly placed to exert much pressure on Mr. Marcos to make the sweeping reforms that many Filipino and foreign analysts say are necessary. Indeed, some analysts argue that U.S. interests are "hostage" to Mr. Marcos because of the importance Washington attaches to the Subic Bay Naval Station and Clark Air munist organization. Two major islands, Luzon and Mindanao, account for 66 percent of the country's 300,000 square kilometers (about 120,000 square miles. These are separated by the 7,000 islands of the Visayas. Population estimated at 50,740,000 (1982).

Capital: Manila, population 1,6 million. The Manila metropolitan area also includes Quezon City (1.16 million), Caloccan City (467,000), and Pasay City (287,000). Other major cities: Davao (610,000), Cebu (490,281) and Zamboanga (343,000).

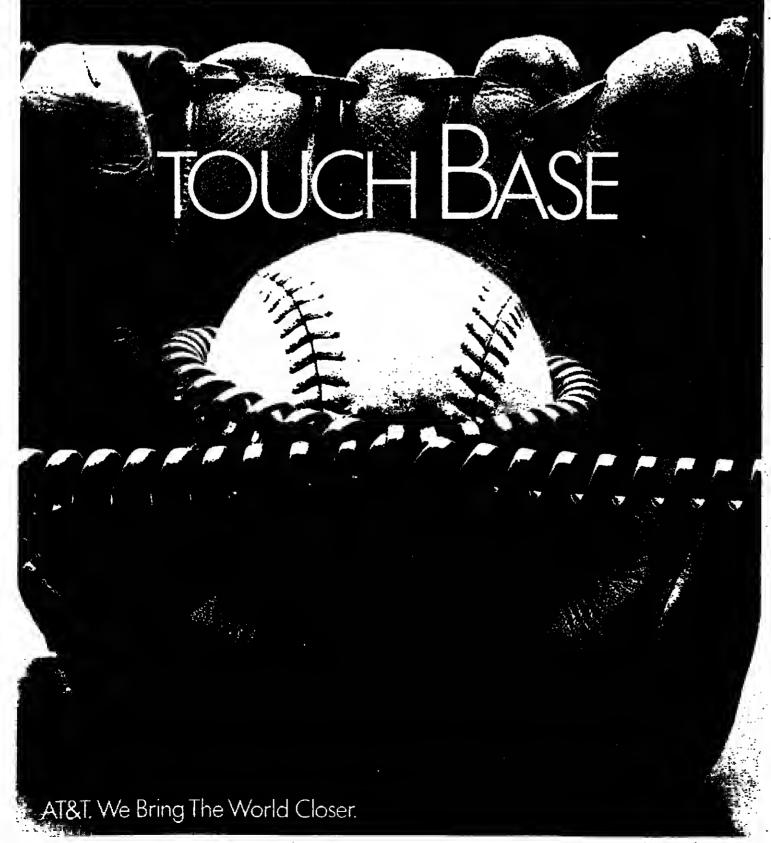

Religions: More than 90 percent Christian, predominantly Roman Catholic, In the south are about 2.8 million Moslems.

Economy: Largely based on agriculture, with rice, coconuts and sugar cane the principal crops.

Languages: English is widely spoken; the use of Spanish is declining. The national language is Pilipino, which is based on Tagalog and which is spoken by 21 percent

History: The Philippines became a Spanish colony in the 16th century. Spain ceded the islands to the United States in 1898, after the Spanish-American War. The Japanese armed forces occupied the islands from 1942 to 1945. Independence came on July 4, 1946, with a government set up along U.S. lines.

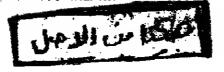

Government: Ferdinand E. Marcos was elected president in 1965. In 1972, before the end of his second four-year term, he declared martial law, citing subversive activities is the reason. He lifted it in 1981. In 1983, the opposition leader Benigno S. Aquino Jr., returning to the Philippines after three years of self-imposed exile, was shot and killed on w arrival at Manila International Airport. An inquiry into his death continues.

INTERNATIONAL MANAGER

New Services Hold Hands Of Expatriate Executives

By SHERRY BUCHANAN International Herald Tribane

ONDON - London may be more familiar to you than Katmandu, but it still doesn't mean that you would feel instantly at home with British idiosyncracies. "You can mstantly at home with British idiosyncracies. "You can make jokes that aren't appropriate, live in the wrong place, approach bankers in the wrong way, address letters in the wrong way and ignore local charities," said Philip Sorensen, the Danish president of Group 4 Security Group, a Danish-owned company based in London that is Europe's largest security concern. Mr. Sorensen had to muddle through on his own when he first moved to Britain 20 years ago.

ji To help other foreign senior executives figure out what makes the British tick, Mr. Sorensen and Jorge Pederson, a Danish and Jorge Pederson, a Danish business consultant, have started a five-day briefing for a maximum of 10 senior executive couples at £3,000 (about $3,950) a couple. Three days are at Dormy House, near Stratford on Avon in the English countryside, and two to "high flyers." days are in London at the Inn on the Park hotel.

Information ranges

to an introduction

from drinking habits

Their new venture, Executive Briefing, includes a wide range of information. It covers which London chibs to belong to: English drinking habits — "disgusting just like their food," according to the Briefing's wine expert, Peter Pugson; corporate and personal tax. insurance and banking tips, and a two-day introduction to the "high flyers" of the City of London.

These "high flyers" include top executives at the Baltic Exchange, the London Stock Exchange, the Metal and Commodity exchanges, National Westminster Bank, the Bank of England, and Samuel Montagu & Co., the merchant bank.

"So many executives lose so much business time when they first come here," said Karsten Borch, managing director of Maersk Shipping Co., a Danish shipping line. Mr. Borch, a five-year veteran of London, went along on Executive Briefing's trial run as an observer.

If some companies still let senior executives taking up foreign posts sink or swim, most large companies have developed increasingly sophisticated in-house services for expatriate executives and their families. It's a corporate cocoon in which a company takes care of your personal taxes and insurance, buys or rents your house, suggests schools for your kids and will even find a psychiatrist specializing in cross-cultural neuroses.

But even the corporate cocoon cannot make a senior executive and his family feel totally at home in their new environment.

""What Executive Briefing is trying to do is cover the little things that everybody thinks are obvious," said Gordon Reeves, a general manager of National Westminster Bank, who hosts a lunch for the participants. "I think it could be very helpful for companies without connections here, for example for U.S. senior executives who speak the same language and think living in the U.K. is just like living in the U.S."

Participants in the trial run of Executive Briefing found information about taxes, insurance and personal banking most useful. "What I found most valuable is that you can save tax money by going to the Briefing," said Neil Foss, president of N. Foss Electric AS, a Danish electronics company. Mr. Foss said that he went to Executive Briefing as a "guinea pig" to see if it would be useful for other top Danish managers.

Another concern that senior foreign executives have is meeting the right business crowd fast. "I met extremely valuable highranking business people who will be easy to go back to," said Mr. brough to the managin bank in the City of London on your own!"

Mr. Reeves of National Westminster said: "It really isn't difficult but they (senior foreign executives) don't know it until they try it. The point is that it's a nice, comfortable feeling to actually know a person."

Like some U.S. ones, some large European companies do not provide extensive in-house services for executive families going abroad. "We've been in the U.K. for 40 years so we have all the connections we need," said Frede Ahlgren Erickson, deputy (Continued on Page 9, Col. 6)

July Sales Off 0.9% In U.S.

Consumer Credit Climbed in June

By Jane Seaberry
Washington Post Service
WASHINGTON — Retail sales dropped 0.9 percent in July, the first decline since March, but consumer borrowing continued to elimb in June, reaching a near-re-cord, the government reported

The Commerce Department re-port on retail sales sent the dollar down sharply in foreign exchange trading. Late Tuesday in New York, the dollar was trading at 2.8695 Deutsche marks, down from 2.8860 Monday, while the pound climbed to $1.3255 from $1.3208.

The decline in sales was looked upon as good news by economists who hope that economic growth will decline enough to prevent an acceleration of inflation. A slow-down would also make it less likely that the Federal Reserve would tighten credit.

The increase in consumer credit, bowever, threatened to keep upward pressure on interest rates. Consumers increased installment credit by $7.8 billion in June, a rate exceeded only by May's record $10.2 billion.

Economists reconciled the two reports by saying that the credit surge occurred while retail sales were also strong, particularly in du-rable goods and automobiles. They said that when the July consumer credit report is issued in September, it will probably show a smaller

"Slower growth of consumer spending should help to relieve pressure on the credit markets resulting from the record installment borrowing of recent months," said Commerce Secretary Malcolm Baldrige. "However, because of con-tinuing gains in real disposable income and high levels of confidence, the outlook for the consumer sector remains good."

We think consumers are flush with money and they're quite confi-dent about the future and they'll keep spending," said Donald Straszheim of Wharton Economet-

IBM Links With Big Names in Europe In Bid to Increase Its Share of Market

By David E. Sanger New York Times Service

LONDON — For as long as it has sold computers communications companies "IBM's Trojan horse," in Europe, International Business Machines Corp. has been an outsider, a U.S. behemoth whose presence was tolerated only because its products were needed. But with its decade-long antitrust dispute with the European Community finally settled, IBM is accelerating a campaign to establish its subsidiaries here as decidedly European. It is striking up alliances with the biggest names in European telecommunications, such as British Tele-com and STET, Italy's government-controlled tele-phone company, to gain entry to Europe's market for data communications. It has pushed, with some success, to secure footholds in Europe's two largest hightechnology research programs. At the same time, the company claims to have decentralized its operations in Britain, France, West Germany and Italy, giving more decision-making authority to the nationals who bead IBM subsidiaries in

"They will be given goals to reach, but the strategic decisions about how to reach them will be their own," a spokesman for IBM Europe said. Major decisions will still be subject to review at IBM's headquarters in Armonk, New York, or at its European bead office in

The changes at IBM come at a crucial time for the company in Europe. IBM Europe's sales have been healthy, but the growth of its traditional markets bere is slowing. And in the high-growth areas, such as office-automation systems, high-speed data communications and personal computers, the European subsid-iaries have not matched the company's resurgence in the United States.

Europe's contribution to IBM's total revenues declined to 27 percent last year from 40 percent in 1979. And such European manufacturers as Olivetti, Siemens AG of West Germany and ICL PLC of Britain have grabbed significant market shares.

Moreover, the Personal Computer line had a slow start in Europe, It commanded only 16 to 20 percent of the market last year, the first year since its introduction here. The plan is among the biggest in a series of alliances in the last nine months intended to cope with the deregulation of the London stock

"It's a very powerful and impos-ing set-up." said Bernard Lardner, a financial services analyst at the brokerage Laing & Cruickshank. The merger would combine War-bbers execute orders and act as principals, while hrokers act as agents, soliciting orders from the public. That distinction is to end with deregulation, however, which has prompted mergers by the two types of firms.

Rowe & Pitman, a brokerage, specializes in corporate finance and equity research, while Mullens acts as the "government broker," serving as the channel for new issues launched into the government securities, or gilt-edged, market. STOCKHOLM — Datatronic AB, a Swedish computer, electronics and software company, said Tuesday that it had agreed to acquire a 90-percent share of Victor Technologies Inc., a U.S. microcomputer company with strong sales in Europe.

Victor filed for protection from its creditors in February. Data-tronic said it would contribute $25 million to the financial reconstruction of the U.S. company.

Datatronic's president, Mats Gabrielsson, said the new, Swedish-owned microcomputer and electronics company resulting from the transaction would have sales of 1.2 billion to 1.5 billion kronor ($142.5 million to $178.1 million) m 1985, compared with sales of 300 million to 350 million kronor for Datatronic alone in 1984.

Datatronic will lend Victor $15 company, founded as Sirius Sys-tems Technology Inc. in 1980, started recording heavy losses after it acquired Victor United Inc. in desk calculators and cash registers, but the strategy failed.

In 1983, Datatronic reported pretax profit of 25.99 million kronor on sales of 230.7 million kronor, up from pretax profit of 11.37 million kronor in 1982.

Datatronic officials said they expected sales of Victor microcomputers in Europe to recover rapidly now that the foture of the company was more assured. Eighty-five per-70 percent of them in Europe.

U.S. Sees Near-Record For Soviet Grain Buying

The Associated Press

WASHINGTON — The Soviet Union, which has experienced "continued deterioration" of its grain crops this year, may import a near-record 43 million metric tons of grain in 1984-85, substantially more than had been previously forecast, according to the Agriculture

A month ago, Soviet grain imports from all foreign sources were expected to be 38 million tons for the international marketing year that began July 1 and ends next June 30. In 1983-84, according to department figures, the Soviet Union imported 32.9 million tons. The record was 46 million tons in 1981-82.

The Soviet Union has bought almost 9.5 million tons of U.S. wheat and corn since June 29, mostly for delivery in 1984-85.

The report issued Monday by the Agriculture Department's Foreign Agricultural Service, cited a number of factors behind the imports. Among them were that:

 Prospects for the 1984 grain crop have deteriorated to an estimated 180 million tons from 190 million forecast in July. · A series of poorer-than-expected harvests, begioniog with the 1979 crop, has forced the Soviet Union to draw heavily on its grain stock-Livestock inventories contioue at record or near-record levels, although the rate of expansion seems to be slowing.

THE LEOPARD HUNTS IN DARKNESS.

By Wilbur Smith. 423 pp. $16.95. Doubleday, 245 Park Avenue, New York, N.Y. 10167.

Reviewed by Thomas Gifford

A FRICA has always inspired a myth-making kind of awe. It is said you can said!

Africa from the top of the Spanish Steps in Rome. Sir Thomas Browne wrote rather touchingly of his faith in the mystery of the Dark Continent in the 17th century: "We carry with us the wonders we seek without us: there is all Africa and her prodigies in us." And Shake-speare hailed its vague but presistible appeal: "I speak of Africa and golden joys." Our fasti-nation has hardly slackened with the passage of time, but it has veered away from the spiritual battleground where Hemingway men like Francis Macomber went to face the unyielding. unforgiving mirror of their inner selves. Gone are the days of Peter Viertel's "White Hunter. Black Heart." Gone is the wrathlike Baroness Blixen who as Isak Dinesen gave us "Out of Africa." Gone is Conrad's "Heart of Dark-

I think we can date the changing face of literary Africa, at least so far as the mass of the reading public is concerned, to a newspaper columnist and writer of adventure stories who may be now largely forgotten -- Robert Ruark. In the 1950s, particularly with a novel called "Something of Value," Ruark reached a gigantic andience with the bloody, intensely violent, hingely political story of the Mau Mau movement. Nicholas Monsarrat, best known for "The Cruel Sea," was equally fascinated by Africa and his novel, "The Tribe That Lost Its Head," (1956) also addressed political developments, what was going on in Africa.

What that was was the coming apart of the continent as we had known it for generations
— a place inhabited by a white boy raised by apes, a place where cannibals are missionanies for high tea, a place for chaps on safari to exhibit their worst or best natures according to the Herningway litmus, a colonial place where the Black Sheep went from Europe to save their families' disgrace — what it was was Africa beginning to be reclaimed by the Afri-cans, some whites, but mostly black.

Wilbur Smith continues his version of this rowdy, blood-smeared saga in his latest novel, "The Leopard Hunts in Darkness," which is set in Zimbabwe, formerly Rhodesia. He deals with the political fallout of independence, the. intense antagonism between the noble, disen-franchised Matabele and the cool, conniving Mashona who outnumber the Matabele and run the government, much to the discomfort of . the Matabele. The story is told in terms that might best be designated black and white. And in fact, aside from Smith's affection for the macho Matabele, his hero is a novelist, Craig Mellow, who returns to his family estates and tries to reclaim them. The requisite girl is a photographer and, unfortunately, Smith is capable of describing Mellow's feelings for her as "an almost religious awe."

But never mind — you're not reading this for the love story. Action is the name of Wilbur

Smith's game and he is a master. The novel opens with a bit of action nature writing that takes your breath away—it's the best piece of prose in the novel—and there is a car-truck, bad road chase-escape scene that Indiana Jones would love. There's political villainy, criminal game posching, brutality that involves blowing children's heads off gic ploy. The politics may be simplistic, the macho-man number may wear thin. But Smith does this better than most and it all adds up to a helluva couple days' read, if you're in the mood.

The reviewer is the author of "The Wind-Chill Factor" and "Hollywood Gothic." He wrote this review for The Washington Past.

At one table, South reached six spades, as shown, in the face of East's opening bid. The opening lead was the diamond ace, and, when this held, West had to make a crucial play.

Another diamond play forces the closed hand to ruff, while a club shift forces the dummy to ruff. The latter play, defeating the slam, was cor-rectly chosen by the West play-

The Stigma of Silver

By Russell Baker W YORK —There has been a lot of tension in our oeighborhood ever since Gretchen, the girl next door, sneaked home early from the Olympics. Gretchen's specialty is walking on her hands, and in the Games she represented the United States in the women's 35-mile handwalk, and had to take silver medals. some of which you probably saw on televisioo. The ABC cameras showed almost all of the stretch through Anaheim in which Gretchen held the lead.

After the Egyptian girl went ahead on the Harbor Freeway, naturally the network switched over to men's Indian wrestling, in which the United States team was clobbering all comers on its way to picking up six gold medals.

So you probably never beard that Gretchen came in second in the women's handwalk and had to take a silver medal. It was a heavy blow to her folks, who hadn't wanted her to take up women's handwalking in the first place.

Many a time I have heard her mom say, "I never thought baby Gretchen would grow up to have size 14 hands."

Her dad wasn't ton high on it, either, but he tried to look on the hright side, "After Gretchen wins the Olympics," he told me a few weeks ago, "she'll clean up financially by endorsing patent medicine cures for athlete's foot of the

You could tell, though, that deep down he would have passed up the money for a daughter whose bands weren't all covered with bunions.

I could understand that. Greichen's success had contaminated all the young girls of the neighbor-hood, including my own toddler. She had taken to toddling around the house on her hands and hoasting that by the 1996 Olympics she would be ready to defeat communism by taking the gold in the women's 35-mile handwalk.

Secretly, I hoped she might grow up with nothing worse than dish-pan hands, but since this was a sexist view of the matter I oever expressed it. There is oo need to express it now that Gretchen has let the conntry down by losing the gold medal to an Egyptian, Personally, though unlike some of my oeighbors, I don't think Gretchen threw the race because communists or somebody just as bad got to her. Io fact, I think Jim McKay handied the whole embarrassement exactly right by simply reading her name along with a couple of other U.S. athletes who had let themselves get whipped by foreigners

I admit I was shocked to learn there was anything besides the women's 35-mile handwalk at which the United States had failed to wio the gold.

п After learning that other Americans besides Gretchen had lost gold medals, I refused to side with Ed, one of the neighborhood hot-heads. Ed wanted everybody to demonstrate outside Gretchen's house with signs saying "America — get the gold for it or leave it." As I told Ed, Gretchen just might he a lot more patriotic than her second-place finish makes her look. For example, suppose President Reagan had called her up and said, "Gretchen, I want you to go out there and lose one for the Gipper" "Why would be do that?" Ed

It's obvious, isn't it? We invite all these countries to come to our country and play games, and then we win every game, and everybody sits in the stands cheering for our side. Suppose I invited Ed to my house for supper and my family sat around the table cheering while I ate up all the soup, steak, potatoes, lettuce and watermelon.

Going home empty, Ed might think I was a pretty poor sport. Our guests at the Olympics may feel the same way this year, especially if they watched their defeats oo American television.

Who knows more about sportsmanship than the Gipper? Sure he could have phoned Gretchen, and a couple of other kids, ton.

You won't find me denouncing those youngsters. Gretchen may be stiematized with silver in the public's view, but I'll bet there'll soon he a secret White House ceremony at which she'll get the gold for patriotism.

Then, though publicly despised she will always be able to walk tall with feet held high in the air.

Dr. Johnson: Defining a Lexicographer

London Exhibition Honors 'Book-Learned Blockhead' Who Put 'Clodpates' in Their Place

By Max Wykes-Joyce nternational Herald Trib

ONDON — Only once in the long life of the English man of letters Samuel Johnson (1708-1784) is there a record of his losing a war of words. This was in the early 1750s, when Dr. Johnson, workiog on his monumental "Dictionary of the English Language," was being ferried across the river Thames in a small rowboat crewed by a Cockney water-

The fellow, in the good doctor's opinion, was charging too much and moving too slowly; so he began heaping abuse upon the waterman, choosing from the 22 derogatory epithets which were to feature in the dictionary. "Growtnol" he shouted, meaning "an idle, lazy fellow"; "clodpare" (a stupid fellow) and its synonyms "numskull" "wantwit" and "jobbernowl"; "understrapper" (a petly nobody); "garlickeater" — even then the English were xeno-phobic; "drotchel" (sluggard); borrel" (mean creature).

No wit perturhed by this abuse, the waterman made no answer, but silently semicircling the tiny craft through the full 180 degrees, returned to the shore, forcefully propelled his passenger on to the dry land whence they had embarked hut a few moments before, and shouted after Johnson's shambling and retreating figure: "Pox take you for a book-learned blockhead!"

Book-learned Samuel Johnson certainly was, blockheaded as surely be was not, as may be seen from the bicentennial exhibition, Samuel Johnson 1709-1784: a scheme of LIFE: a plan of STUDY," arranged by Kai Kim Yung currently registrar of the National Portrait Gallery, for-merly curator of the Johnson Birthplace Museum, for the Arts Council of Great Britain at its headquarters in Piccadilly.

This loan show centers on two aspects of Johnson's work and life —his masterwork, the Dictionary, and a wealth of portraits of Johnson, his friends, family and the intellectual circle surrounding him. The Dictionary (its full title is "A dictionary of the English Language: in which the Words

By Samuel Johnson, A.M. In Two Volumes") occupied a full eight years from 1747, when the synopsis, "Plan of a Dictionary," was published by the booksellers for whom he contracted to produce the work, to its publication by them in 1755.

The synopsis had been ad-dressed to the "Rt. Hon. Philip Dormer, Earl of Chesterfield, one of His Majesty's Principal Secre-taries of State," in the hope that Chesterfield would ease Johnson's way by substantial patron-age. Disappointed in this, and feeling monstrously slighted by Chesterfield, Johnson, on publication, addressed a letter to his lordship that began: "Seven years, My Lord, have oow past since I waited in your outward Rooms or was repulsed from your Door, during which time I have been pushing oo my work through difficulties of which it is useless to complain. ." and fur-ther got even by his dictionary definition of "patron: commonly a wretch who supports with inso-lence and is paid with flattery."

Indeed, Johnson's dictionary definitions are often closely associated with his personal career. The son of a bookseller in the northern city of Lichfield, be was so well trained that he was ever after able to bind a book — "bo-casine: a fine buckram" — and, given the run of his father's stock-in-trade, was in childhood a Latin scholar. He went up to Oxford as a student, but left without taking his degree (his doctorates came as honors in 1765 from Trinity Col-lege, Dublin, in 1775 from Oxford University, which had earlier conferred an honorary degree of Master of Arts, just in time for A.M. to he appended to his name

School ("grammar school: a school in which the learned languages are grammatically taught") his career as a man of letters began as an occasional writer of essays ("essay: an irregular undigested piece, not a regular and orderly composition") for The Birmingham Journal

In Birmingham he married a lady 20 years his senior, the widow of his friend Harry Porter. After another abortive attempt at running a boarding school at Edial, near Lichfield, where their chief pupil was he who later became the most celebrated of acsor-managers, David Garrick, the Johnsons came to London, and the lexicographer ("a harmless drudge, that busies himself in. tracing the original, and detailing the signification of words") embarked on his main career by becoming editorial writer for the monthly "Gentleman's Magazine ("magazine: of late this word has signified a miscellaneous pamphlet, from a periodical miscellany named the Gentleman'a Magazine, by Edward Cave.")

The engraved portrait of Ed-ward Cave by Charles Grignon (1721-1810) is one of the portraits, many of Johnson himself, notably by his friend Sir Joshua Reynolds, as well as his friends, editors and contemporaries, that have been borrowed for this exhibition and mounted in this delightful period withdrawing room. Other portraits include that of Mrs. Johnson when she was still Mrs. Elizabeth Porter': Dr. Johnson's biographer James Boswell, by George Willison (174I-1797); Reynolds's portrait of Johnson, the statesman Edmund Burke and the other members of the social, dining and traveling club ("traveltainted: harrassed, fatigued with travel") the painter founded with Johnson; and David Garrick by Thomas Gainsborough.

It is this harmony between the bookish and the artistic that makes this bicentenary show a particular pleasure.
"Samuel Johnson 1709-1784,"

on the title page of the Dictionary).

The items represent the sinking of the Argenrepresent the sinking of the Argen-tine battleshin General Belgrand during the 1982 Falkland Islands war. The piece is on display at London's Serpentine Gallery. An-thony Beammont-Dark, a Conserva-tive member of Parliament, said the work was vastly overpriced. "We have come to an incredible state of mind when confidence tricks are played in the name of art upon the public with public money." The sculptor, Richard Wentworth, 36.

Not after the first night of his cross-country hike to raise money for a hospital fund in memory of a young friend who died of cancer did Jeff Pagenstecher think about scrapping the idea and packing it in. Leaving New York City, he was caught wearing sneakers in a heavy rainstorm and his feet had "blisters on top of blisters." Pagenstecher, 23, of Hopwood, Pennsylvania, was intentionally hit by a driver in Kansas, robbed in Kansas City and California, bedridden with pneumonia for nearly three weeks and threatened twice with violence, he said. He hiked through storms. blizzards and two tornadoes and endured freezing weather in Mis-souri and blistering heat in the Ne-vada and California deserts. But he met mayors and governors; people who read about him or heard him on radio talk shows went out to meet him on the road. "Americans

A British barber carned a new place in the Guinness Book of Records Monday after shaving 235 men in one hour. "I used 12 extremely sharp cutthroat raifers and cut only one man," said Gesty Harley from Gillingham, in southern England, after the charity event. His achievement will accompany his existing record of 987 shaves in one hour using a safety razior.

Two Englishmen attempting to run 16,000 miles (25,800 kilometers) around the world are in Istanbul having finished the first leg of their journey despite being accused of spying in Yngoslavia, their London agents said Monday. Henry Weston, 22, of Portsmouth, and Robin Cross, 23, of Norwich, have reached Istanbul £2,000 ($2,600) in debt but "feeling great," Cross was quoted as saying. They were arrested in Yugoslavia after bedding down for the night in what they thought was a park. Guards with machine guns woke them at 4 A.M Sept of the Control of hours of interrogation. It turned out they had been sleeping in a military base, Cross said. The pair covered 2.281 miles (3.650 kilometers) since leaving London in April.
